Nathan walks up to you with a look of worry and uncertainty. His hands are tucked in his pockets, and he keeps checking left and right until he leans against a rock a few feet away.

"We need to talk, Lou. I…I saw what you did on the hill during the battle," he says and swallows hard. "Don't try to tell me I'm mistaken, or that I misunderstood what happened. I know you killed them." He pauses and looks around the hilltop again. No other survivor is nearby, though Jaime and Reilly are walking up the hill, maybe twenty yards away. "I haven't told anyone…yet. I felt the need to talk to you first. Why did you did it? Why kill someone when we're all trying to survive together?"

- ● "I just snapped on that hill. My mind went blank, and when I came back around, I had killed them."

- ○ "I had reason to believe they were working against us all."

- ○ "There's something dark inside me, and it made me do it."

- ○ "I'm not saying I did or did not kill anyone, but if you want to stay alive, you'll keep your mouth shut."

- ○ "Revenge. Not many people are aware of this, but before the outbreak, I knew them," I say, lying to Nathan.

- ○ "Before our group formed, they were part of a bandit group that tried to kill Jaime and me. I only let them join us until I saw an opportunity to take them out."
